What is stereophonic sound It is the latest technical development in recording whereby, when reproduced on the proper equipment, the sound of each instrument reaches your ears from the same direction as it would from its position in the concert hall. For example, where in the concert hall the sound of the string section originates from the left side of the orchestra, in your room this sound appears to come from the left. Woodwinds, where originating from the centre of the orchestra, appear to come from the centre of your room. The timpani, where originating from the right of the orchestra, appear to come from the right of your room. The overall effect is to recreate in your room all of the sounds of the " live " orchestra in proper relationship to one another.
